MARIA SIBYLLA MERIAN (GERMANY, 1697–1751)

Maria's daughter was very famous for painting flowers and insects, and encouraged Maria to become an artist.

Maria also grew up with a love of nature. She collected insects to study them and see how they changed through their life cycles. She used her own collection to create illustrations of different butterflies and moths, and painted the amazing things that she saw.

NEW KNOWLEDGE

When she grew up, Maria had the chance to study natural history at university. Her first book was about the life cycle of the caterpillar, which she illustrated with eggs on a butterfly.

All kinds of insects, like bees, are important to our world. They help us grow our food and keep our gardens and farms healthy. We can learn a lot from them and use their knowledge to help us live better lives.

NEW ADVENTURES

When Maria was 16, she and her daughter moved to Amsterdam. In Dutch America, at the time, it was very common for women to travel to work in colonies. They were not seen as unusual.

Maria was the first person to create an illustration of the life cycle of the butterfly. Her drawings helped people understand that the work of an entomologist was important.
